There is so much going on in Government today that it is hard to cover it all. But here goes.

A little history: President Nixon lied about Watergate and had to resign the Presidency.

President George H. W Bush said no new taxes and because he lied he was defeated for reelection.

President Clinton lied about sex and Monica Lewinskii and he was impeached.

So President Onama has lied to us about Obamacare and so many other things and so shouldn't he resign or be impeached.

For example, the Department of Justice argued in the U. S. District Court that Obamacare is defective which is opposite to What President Obama is saying.

Rick Santorum was interviewed on the Governor Mike Huckabee Show and he spoke about Government control when President Obama dictates what we must do about our health care. Then President Obama starts changing portions of the law which is an unconstitutional act as only Congress can change the law or repeal it.

When our Federal Government goes bad it perpetuates itself by creating more regulations.

John Stossel on his Fox News show recently spoke about Government Regulations. He said when government fails, it just expands, but when private business fails, it closes up shop.

In a recent article in the Wall Street Journal, William Galston wrote that the American people are losing what little confidence they have in the capacity of our National Government to act effectively and our President's standing as a competent manager of his own government has eroded badly.

I leave you with a point to ponder: I agree with Mr. Galston that if President Obama cannot restore confidence in the government and his leadership, the people may well hold the rest of his agenda at arms length. This is Phil Arnot for Community Comment..
