I read a very interesting article by Peggy Noonan in the Wall Street Journal which was titled the most memorable words of 2013. She says that the political word of the year when talking about Obama care, was botched. The Oxford dictionary defines the word botched as a bungled piece of work, or Webster's dictionary defines it as being too foul up hopelessly.

The sentence of the year according to Ms. Noonan is if you like your health plan you can keep it which of course came from Pres. Obama and on numerous occasions. As you may recall our president made two statements about Obama care and he repeated those statements like if you like your doctor you can keep your doctor. Or if you like your health plan you can keep your health plan.

Ms. Noonan is more concerned about care and Cure as well as medicine and research. She says that what we need is a cure for Alzheimer's especially with the baby boomers coming of age.

She goes on to relate famous statements by other presidents. For example, Pres. Kennedy's statement, ask not what your country can do for you, but what can you do for your country. And of course the famous saying by FDR, we have nothing to fear but fear itself. My famous statement is what president Reagan said that government is not the solution to our problems, government is the problem.

So compare those statements will with what Pres. Obama will be remembered for. Ms. Noonan says that the president's statements were clear, simple and was understood, which means it is memorable.

She then writes about flying on many of our national airlines. Remember the guy or gal next to you almost yelling into their cell phone preventing anyone nearby to be able to sleep or concentrate on anything. Well according to her article, Delta Airlines has or will announce that cell phone use will not be allowed on its flights. She says that Southwest Airlines may soon follow Delta

I leave you with a point to ponder: don't you wish that those memorable words of our president had in fact been I will work with Congress to make sure that our veterans health care benefits are not cut or I will work with Congress to delay implementation of the individual healthcare mandate for one year.
